

Not only is Wisconsin making headlines all over the state with what's going on in Madison, but across the country in newspaper headlines and on TV. And it sure has caught the attention of one 6th grade teacher from Utah. Oh ya....she is also the Vice President of the National Education Association.

So is this big news we're making here in the Badger state, Lilly Eskelson? YES!

Officials in other states are also keeping a close eye on the situation, mainly because they're attempting similar legislative measures in their states. Leaders in Ohio, New York, New Jersey, Tennessee and Michigan are all considering limits to public employee pensions and benefits.
