

A vote expected this week in Madison on a pro-business mining bill that could have far-reaching impacts throughout the state of Wisconsin. The bill is meant to help locate an iron ore mine in northern Wisconsin. Maybe. Kind of hard to say from the minority Democrat side of the aisle, says Onalaska state rep, Steve Doyle

Critics worry that the mining bill could restrict public input on any new mine in the state.