

NFL Commissioner, Roger Goodell and Pittsburgh Steelers President Art Rooney, were in Minnesota Friday with one goal in mind.....get a new Vikings stadium bill passed...and do it now.

The pair met with Governor Mark Dayton and a handful of lawmakers in the capitol. Goodell said he made no implied threats but in reality he didn't need to. The NFL head said that the team and league are giving the state another 10 or so days of exclusivity before opening the door to relocation alternatives.
