

Movement on redevelopment plans in La Crosse. The city council has given initial approval for beginning negotiations for development on a few projects and planning for a new TIF district on the northside. That has local tea partier Greg Luce dissatisfied, especially since the city still doesn't have a policy for dealing with TIF districts

Along with the TIF, the council has also agreed to talks with Trane company and Chart industries on one project and with developer Don Weber on a potential fourth Riverside Center building downtown.