

So there's your offshore oil drilling on display in the gulf coast. And the giant oil spill that's threatening coastlines along the gulf is causing more than a few to rethink the idea of increased drilling. Although La Crosse's Barb Frank, on the national board of the Sierra Club has never been a fan of offshore drilling. She says it risks too much environmental destruction and degradation. The Republican governor of Florida says he's re-thinking support for drilling near the state's coastlines. But the Obama administration, so far, is standing by its plans to expand drilling off the coast.
