

Enforceable campaign finance reform. Can it become a reality? Not according to one local political professor .

\(Click for Audio\)

UW-L Professor, Joe Hiem, says conservative groups spent the majority of the money, but it didn't translate to overall success. The Republican Party lost seats in the House and Senate and lost the presidential race. It was the first presidential election since the Supreme Court ruled to lift restrictions on campaign contributions from corporations and unions. Hiem says reversing the court's decision would be difficult.