

A city council committee has backed a plan to put up cameras in downtown La Crosse. The city's finance committee says yes to a surveillance system that will involve dozens of cameras which the city will operate. Police chief Ron Tischer says there's nothing to fear from the surveillance

\(Click for Audio\)

A private organization will fundraise for the cameras. City police will operate them after that. Annual maintenance is estimated at about a hundred thousand dollars per year.