

The sky has not yet fallen for many advocacy groups around Wisconsin. There's still hope among groups like Citizen Action of Wisconsin that the state legislature--especially the state senate--will turn down governor Walker's planned rejection of a federally-funded medicaid expansion in the state; a plan that's included in the state's two year budget bill. Citizen Action's Robert Kraig says he's counting on lawmakers seeing just how bad of a plan Walker's is

\(Click for Audio\)

Kraig says, even if lawmakers agree to reject the medicaid expansion, it will only be a matter of time before the state changes course and takes the money.