Police on video is nothing new. Cops all the time face people who want to record police at work. Like the couple La Crosse cops stopped early this morning on the northside. One of the them, Paul Deason, told the cop he was recording the entire process. Officer asked him not to. Deason went ahead anyway. And when he made a call with the same phone he was using to record, the officer took it away. What Deason didn't get on video was when police found in his car the hidden compartment filled with bags of pot. Deason and his girlfriend now face drug dealing charges.
