

The new tourism and cultural center in Onalaska is rolling along again. Katie Meyers with the city's planning department says some key reports are finally coming back.

\(Click for Audio\)

The city is putting together a nearly $2.5 million center. It will be built along Highway 35, just north of the interstate. The hopes are to have it open by September 2015.