

New wood stoves sold in the US would have to meet much stricter emissions requirements as soon as next year. The EPA is currently taking comments on the emissions rules for new stoves. They may as well make the change now, says Angela Kupietz from La Crosse Fireplace

\(Click for Audio\)

Kupietz says the new requirements are actually good for consumers because lower emissions mean the new stoves also use considerably less wood and result in much less ash.