There are 118 bald men and women roaming the campus of UW-L today. Not a fad or trend though. A fund raising event that brought in over $10 thousand this weekend for the St. Baldrick's Foundation, which supports childhood cancer research.

So that's a lot of hair to clean up.....and as UW-L Sophomore Amanda Abrahamson tells us.....it was all swept up for a good cause. Hair will be donated to various organizations to help clean up oil spills and provide hairpieces to children who have lost their hair because of a medical condition.

This is the third year students in UW-L's Coate Hall have organized the fundraiser, which raised a total of $22 thousand the first two years.
