

Chances are, the experiment's over.

After season number two, an alternate side parking exemption test area around UW La Crosse seems to have only resulted in more tickets and narrower streets. City public works director Dale Hexom says consensus seems to be building behind the idea that the trial simply isn't working. An official report on the test area is still coming. This season, alternate side parking tickets in the area doubled over last year.