

You should start seeing a slightly higher water bill in La Crosse.

But no stormwater utility. Not yet. The city has just recently been given the green light to hike water rates. Also recently, the city council agreed to create a storm water utility. But that won't show up on water bills until next year. The city's engineering department tells us there's much to do in preparing for the implementation of the water utility. Including preparing forms for those applying for credits for mitigating run-off. Stormwater utility charges will start appearing on bills in February.
