

No action yet by UW La Crosse regarding students who may have been involved in the large group disturbance around the campus last week-end.

Paula Knudson is the Dean of Students at UWL. She says if they identify students who are involved, they'll consider the level of involvement and "take appropriate action." She says campus police would have to bring her office information about illegal activities about students before she would be able to take any action. Knudson also indicates that some recommendations are likely to come from the campus cops.
