

Ira Robins says he has a plan to put a halt to candidates in the state accepting campaign money from special interest groups. The Democratic Lt. Governor candidate says it's easy.

At a forum last night in Sparta, Robins says his independence makes him the best candidate for lieutenant governor, especially since he has a plan, investigative experience, and proven courage required to stop the negative effects of special interest money on our elected officials. Robins is best known for his investigation into the wrongful murder conviction of Laurie Bambi Bembenek.
