

Tomah Police shut down part of a neighborhood Wednesday to investigate what they believed was a mobile meth lab found in a parked car. Tomah Police Lieutenant Ron Waddell tells us that around 11am they were informed of the possible lab at 407 Clark Street.

Police met with the person in the parked car and found items associated with making meth in the car. The products used to make meth were toxic and flammable so Police shut down part of the street for about three hours. The La Crosse County Sheriff's Department was called in to assist with removing the items from the area.

Waddell says no arrests have been made at this time because the crime is under investigation.
