

Winter weather has been late in coming to Wisconsin...forcing many people who participate in winter sports to wait for snow.

Just two out of the 16 ski areas in Wisconsin are open for business today. Mount La Crosse is making snow, but the slopes won't be ready for at least another week, according to marketing director Darcie Breidel. So far, this season is starting much the same as last winter did...and Darcie says last season's conditions were bad for business.

Last winter, the lack of snow forced Mount La Crosse to shut down by the first week of March.
