

The dispute over voter ID in Wisconsin goes back to the appeals courts...

The state Supreme Court has decided not to rule on the ID law. And for local election officials like La Crosse County clerk Ginny Dankmeyer, it means conducting elections the same way they've been doing things already.

With the law being blocked by lower-court judges, Wisconsin voters still do not have to show an ID at the polls when they vote.