

Cougar Attack A Sign of Things to Come?

Wednesday, 19 May 2010 10:51 -

Could this week's cougar attack in Wisconsin's Juneau county be the first among many? Might depend on how many cougars we're talking about. The Wisconsin DNR is unsure how many big cats are in the state. But the agency knows what to do when cougars start going after livestock. Remove it from the landscape. That means killing it, says the agency's Adrian Wydeven. He says cougars can likely exist pretty well in Wisconsin, as long as they don't come into conflict with humans or farm animals.