

Another month of not so great employment news in Wisconsin. Fresh on the heels of a federal evaluation finding the state at 44th among all states in terms of job creation, is the latest report from Madison on employment and it doesn't look rosy. The state says the majorities of cities and counties have unemployment increases in February from January and from the same month last year as well. La Crosse metro area is just one of two in the state that had no change in unemployment rate for the month. The city itself also showed no change in unemployment rates for February, stuck at 7.5%.