

Will Wisconsin take another shot at federal Race to the Top funding? One La Crosse school board member fully believes the state will make a third attempt to win education dollars under the fed program. But Neil Duresky says he won't say yes to the application when asked. Duresky sticks to the basic premise that the federal education is supposed to leave education to the states and that the Race to the Top program treats states unfairly because it forces them to compete for education dollars. Duresky says the application process for Race to the Top is hopelessly flawed.