

Schreiber Foods of Green Bay has spent over $100 million in the last five years on its two Richland Center yogurt plants, which together employ about 400 people. Now they have plans to build a distribution facility there. Schreiber Foods plans to break ground this month for a 33 thousand square foot distribution center, to be built as an addition to one of the Richland Center plants with construction expected to be finished by fall. The new center will offer more space to handle increased yogurt production from both Richland Center plants. 83% of households in the U.S. are buying yogurt and three quarters of them are repeat customers.
