

They're ready for the next two years...

La Crosse County supervisors elected two weeks ago have been sworn in, and voted to keep Tara Johnson in the chairman's seat. Johnson says board members have worked well together in recent years, and do a good job representing a diverse community. This month's election came a short time after the county decided to sell its administrative center, and started making plans to move departments to other buildings. Three incumbent board members were ousted, apparently in reaction to those county decisions.
