

Losing track of kids during the summer can be mildly annoying for some parents. For others, it's a reason to call police. And call police they do, says La Crosse police officer, Lisa Barrix. And police respond. In a very serious way

\(Click for Audio\)

Barrix says, typically, a child who has disappeared is merely hanging out with friends and hasn't communicated with parents about his whereabouts.